Grand Old Party

Here's where we congratulate Mrs. Philip F. Brown on the wonderful success of her camp party at Outside Inn, Inn. Everyone enjoyed right into the spirit of the whole thing. That is why everyone had such a good time. There were thirty-seven of us present, both young and old, and we made enough noise for a hundred.

Mrs. Brown, better known to us as Margaret, furnished most of the eats, and what eats! Sandwiches, (some of the waitresses helped to make those) cakes, cookies, olives, peanuts, hot coffee, lemonade, and some peachy fudge with lots of nuts.

The first of the evening until eleven o'clock (D. T.) was spent in dancing and playing little children's games. The music for dancing was furnished by a portable and late hits-of-the-week. Several stunts were performed, a snappy clog was given by one of the drivers, "Andy Gump" Gurney, which was cleverly done, also a couple of songs were sung by yours truly, Y. Upton, which seemed to make quite a hit, one of them being the famous "Old Maid and Brawler" selection!

About twelve o'clock the party broke up and the most of the grown up ladies by that time had become weary and were taken home, but the rest of us went over to the dance nearby, and danced till it was about one o'clock, D. T. If we all could have gotten together we would have given Margaret a rousing cheer for the fun she had given us. It might be added that some of us went down the next day to clean up the camp, it looked as if "the wind had blown through in a torrent of madness".

Heard and Seen at Advertiser Office

A spiritualist meeting will be held Wednesday evening, August 13th at 49 Water street. Anyone interested is invited. See ad. in Intelligence column.

Early for hunting talk, but Capt. Mel informs us that he has accepted an invitation to go after birds October 1st. He promises the high qualities of the bird he lead the party, and one of the best in the state.

Arthur Higgins, better known as "Maggie", is helping in the back shop of the leading season incidental to the season. Higgins learned his trade from his father, and is one of the Advertiser's regulars.

S. H. Heald and wife of Lovell were out last of the week. Mr. Heald is a candidate for representative to the Legislature at the September election. He is interested in the Lake Umbagog Club at Lovell.

N. Reed, proprietor of the Pennesses, Robbitts, on Winter street, received a good volume of business the week. He commenced raising the price of his chickens some eighteen cents a dozen, with a yearling buck registered No. 48461 and a doe, Stalls, registered No. 48462 from the American Rabbit Breeders' Association. The family has prospered and gained many orders and often his orders for chickens. Mr. Reed called to change his advertisement in this paper to include a statement that he will deliver a series of lectures on short notice.

Young robbers fluttering day after day, the most attracted the curious. W. Roberts and Jack MacDonald, Cummings mill. The nest is in a tree near Pennesseswasee between the Open House block and the mill and some thirty feet from the ground. Sunday afternoon the object would no longer stand the dissection of the mother robin and the father. Unable to reach the nest, the father climbed the tree and removed the birds. They were tied by the legs with a tough string, and after a few weeks and were badly mangled. When and how the young were joined together is a matter of speculation.

Mr. R. Van Arman himself rolled in the office Tuesday to place advertising for the famous John R. Van Arman's Minstrels to appear in a canvas theatre at County Fair grounds, Saturday evening, August 16. For ten years this show has entertained in Norway or South Norway and traveled in a special combination. John explains that times have changed and he has motorized the show, and carries one of the best tent theatres on the road, being complete in every detail. He features only acts of high quality and is proud of his famous band orchestra. John was in a hurry and Col. Bill Bates, the advance man, would give us more facts for next week.

Dear Wiley, contracting agent for Downie Bros. Motorized Circus, called

Tuesday to place advertising and talk show business. He secured the fair grounds for Saturday, Aug. 30, and the well known circus owned and managed by Andrew Downie will entertain after noon and night. The show played this town two years ago, being the first motorized circus to come this way. Enlarged to three rings with twice the number of circus and animal acts, the outfit is some caravan, using sixty automobiles and trucks for transportation. Contractor Wiley is a Virginian, but has pegged his hat in every state of the union. His last trip here was in advance of the Sig Sautell circus that set up on the old lot twenty-six years ago.

Eugene B. Lane of Berlin, N. H., sends us the following: In looking over a copy of the Youth's Companion of fifty-two years ago, I find the following regarding an old-fashioned winter: "The climate of New England has really undergone a change since the days of our great grandfathers' grandfathers. The winters of Maine are still much severer, of course, than the winters of Eastern Massachusetts; but even Maine has a recent record of winters and snow-falls like those of a century and a half ago. A writer in the Ledger says: "The old desk of my Uncle Samuel, or grandfather, was a repository of quaint and valuable things of oldtime records. His wife had come of a family of seafarers, and away back, for generations, logs and diaries had been kept, and were stored in that desk; and many an interesting item have I found therein. The last time I overhauled the old archives I fell upon a letter, kept upon blank leaves stitched into an 'almanack' for A. D. 1717, and there I found a record of probably the most severe storm ever, known in New England."

"If the exact date had ever been set down, it must have either been torn away or obliterated, but I think the old man or woman, 'Conquer-evil Hall' did not put it down. It was upon blank leaves stitched in between the months of February and March of the year mentioned. On that occasion the snow fell without cessation for six days, and it was estimated that the depth, up a level, was between eight and nine feet; but there had been a howling wind a part of the time, and the drifts were marvelous. I have seen a barn (standing thirty years ago) situated in a slight valley with a forest behind it, which was not only completely buried, but they dug several feet down from the top of the drift before touching the ridge-pole. The cattle in it were found live and well."

In a small district, in a river valley, where a range of hills gave direction to the drifting snow, six dwellings were buried to a considerable depth and the people came over from the village to dig them out. One of them containing a family of five persons, remained under the drift eight days, and as the chronicler makes no mention of any fatality, we are to suppose that the dwellers of those cuts came out alive and well. Those who were lost met their fate by trying to escape from their threatened dwellings, and their bodies were not found until the warmth of spring had melted the snow. The story, known to be true, almost equals the relations of Baron Munchausen."

Mr. Lane, in closing, says: "I am glad we don't have winters like that nowadays, but am quite satisfied with the amount of snow I have to shovel in an ordinary winter."

Tamarack Talk

Have you been following the verse of Frances M. Frost this Spring? I have and have collected more than a few beautiful pieces from her prolific pen. So we'll have somewhat of an anthology this week, and entirely composed of poems by Frances Frost.

A few products of early Spring are: Brief Blossoming
There is nothing lovelier
On the wide and windy loam
Than orchards turning white,
Than apple trees whose fragile bloom
Leans brily in the amber air
And hovers to nothing overnight.
Oh, leave must be the hearts to beat Beauty whose heart is winged for flight!
—New York, April 19.

Oxen
These hills are oxen moving on the sky,
Darkly and deliberately they move into time,
Pushing their shoulders slowly into time,
Their thick sides heaving and their heads pulled down with a crash of stars, they give no heed.
These hills are oxen moving on the sky,
And time is vast and granite cannot bleed.
—New York Sun, May 5.

Spring Woods
The children and the warm notes down
Into the winter woods are silent now.
Other small thrushes rock upon the boughs
That marked the pause between his sputters of light.
The woods, bewildered by the storm of song,
Push frail leaves upward, having now no need
To remember birds from one voice two notes long.
—New York Sun, May 8.

Something a little more metaphysical
is a poem from the latter part of May:
Poem for Youth
The mind is vulnerable
To the slight death of a heart
By swift things, by hawk-shadows
Is the heart quickened to grief.
Whatever wind blows by
An instant of years blows after.
But years and sterner grieving
It takes to fashion Youth, May 24.

Then along comes June.
Defiance to Spring
What do I care if Spring comes round
Pulling crocuses out of the ground,
Blowing the purple and blue and white
Scents of lilac across the night?
What do I care if Spring shakes down
Rains of silver upon my lawn
And sets the orchard petals afloat
And looses seeds in a feathered throat?
Spring is nothing to me any more—
Spring opens the frozen door
Of earth, and beats the door of a heart
Until the thing is battered apart,
Spring is a fire in the breast and the brain—
She won't get a chance to catch me again—
Though the willows are misty gold in the air
And rain blows silver—not that I care!
—New York Sun, June 12.

First Frog
Last night the first frog cried in the marsh.
When the apple trees were lost in the dark and the hush.
Wild voices of croaks were quenched by the woods and the starlight.
Out of the windless fields, from the green brook running,
I heard the bright cry start. I heard it coming Breaking a path through my heart's thorned
thicket, shinning
Buds from the stem and leaving the torn bark aching.
—New York Sun, June 19.

Mountain Song
Sing this from a husky throat,
Sing it low and sing it under Breath: low mountain-cherry whitens
Against earth's dark and fallow thunder:
How water falling through a thicket
Is a crystal undertone,
A crying heart against a stone.
Sing this from a husky throat!
In some fierce and fragile Spring,
Blowing cherry, mountain-water,
Will not avail you anything.
—New York Sun, June 21.

What need to remark on these poetic gems? Words to exalt them are not necessary.
Just a quiet reading and thought will fill you with the power of emotion Frances Frost's work. She is a poet of New England and she certainly does put the very heart of New England into her poems. In the poems that are the product of other places and things than New England Miss Frost wields a most subtle and crafty pen.

And so as Summer comes to us again
we have
Second Season
That Summer has come down again
Upon the earth in the slow way
Of country weather: that the rain
Sifts the hills and blurs a day
Softly to dusk, or that the sun
Pours yellow through the lush green wood
Where birds grow silent one by one—
All this is staunchly understood
And reckoned with: but that you
Alone with Summer, not with you,
Is a truth the unfeeling mind may know.
Yet the heart gives no consent thereto.
—New York, June 21.

So ends our little anthology for this week!
What are we doing about Hart Crane?
Well, patience while we "collect our thoughts."
—Henry Davis Nadig.

STEEL
In ancient and medieval times steel was the symbol of war and was employed almost entirely in the manufacture of swords and kindred weapons.

Now steel has become an instrument of public safety.
Once railroad transportation was dreaded dangerous due largely to the gloriously wrought of wooden trains. This led to the adoption of all-steel safety coaches in 1905 by one progressive railroad. Now they are used on all major lines.

The first steel ocean steamship was made in Scotland in 1858. The first use of steel as a defensive armor in naval warfare was the battle between the Merrimack and the Monitor during the Civil War, which proved a vital factor in preserving the Union. Following that, in care of all makes and all price classes.
Extensive tests have proven that this type of body can withstand shocks and strains that would shatter wooden bodies.
And in these days of high-speed cars and highway congestion, wise motorists insist on the safest and best construction in their automobiles.

Once the instrument of war—now the protector of lives and property. That, briefly, is the history of steel.

A DECALOGUE FOR HOME BUYERS

Whether or not you make a good investment when you purchase a home depends largely upon the amount of care you exercise in its selection. Remember that the house you buy may be your home for years, and therefore, must be satisfactory in every respect. As a practical guide to a sound selection, the following tests are suggested:

1. The carrying charges on a prospective home are your most important consideration. These include such items as taxes, interest on investment, depreciation, repairs and insurance. Make certain that the total of these charges will not be greater than rent on a similar home or greater than you can afford.

2. Buy, if possible, in a location where values are rising. Property often depreciates very rapidly because of its location.

3. Make certain of the present market value of the property. This may be checked in the tax collector's office, by comparing the taxable with the estimated real value, or by determining how much your banker would lend on a first mortgage on the property. If he will give you, say 60 per cent. of his appraisal or property worth about $10,000.

4. Determine what special tax assessments, if any, are outstanding or are likely to be outstanding against the property.

5. Carry sufficient insurance, preferably under the term form of policy, to insure payment of the mortgage should the house before it is fully paid, otherwise the insurance you purchased to assure your dependents an income may be used to finish paying for the home, if it is not to be sacrificed.

6. Avoid speculative buying, or buying during periods of inflation. It is better to buy at a time when prices are stable.

7. Protect your investment adequately with fire insurance, rent and general liability insurance.

8. Take every precaution to insure promptness in your payments to reduce your mortgage and in the maintenance of reserves against house expenses.

9. Engage a reputable lawyer to handle the legal matters in connection with the purchase.

10. Seek competent advice, and deal with no one who is not known to be honest and reliable.
